At the afternoon meeting today with the railroad managers another sing was struck when the managers reluved to accede to the trainment demand that they drop the eight grievances made by the railroads against the employee them-

CLEAN-SHAVEN POLICE AGITATION RENEWED

Reardless Guardians Talked About is London and New York-Maj. Sylvester Says They're Preferable.

LOCAL FORCE IS QUITE NEAT

Local Force is quite NEAT

London dispatches tell of a campaign among police circles there for a beardness force of bluecoats. The same campaign was put on here in Washington almost twenty years ago by Maj. Richard Spivester, superintendent.

While Maj. Spivester considers it no sin for one of his policemen to wear a beard, still he rather for him to present a clean-shaven appearance. "To my knowledge but one man on my force wears a beard," said Maj. Spivester, in discussing the question.

The objection to a hairy face is centered mostly on the man with a bushybeard, and not so much against the westered and the superintendent.

"My policemen as a whole are a near, attractive-looking bunch of men," said the superintendent.

Maj. Spivester said Washington was ahead of New York and London on another feature or idea among policemen; that of prohibiting an officer from picking his tests while on duty.

"A toothpick in a policeman's mouth while on duty suggests to the public that the officer has enjoyed a free lunch somewhere," said Maj. Spivester.

New York just now is beginning a campain for a clean-shaven police force. A great number on the force in the metropolis wear bushy beards and long, wavy mustaches.

MAY HE HEAT HEW

Employer is Beloved.

In a random effort to fix the cause of the fire Mr. Freeman suggests a cigartie. He says it may be that a cigarette still smoldering was thrown beneath the steps by one of the men who had taken a quiet smoke.

Nothing more pathetic than the sight of the venerable mill owner today might be pictured. He threw open the doors of his pretty white and buff house in Fine Street and sent forth, word that. has wished to see all the girls who were able to come to him. Ten years have added themselves to his face and figure. Stooped, trembling, and meet of the time unable to speak, he received "his girls" one by one as they came to his home. Late in the afternoon Little Helen Monuity, the telephone operator, came in shyly, and with her hands extended, The ield man tried to rise and failed, his arms straightened toward the pretty girl and tears flowed down his cheeks in a torrent.

"The fire didn't set you, Helen, child."

and tears nowed users.

"The fire didn't get you, Helen, child." he sobbed. "Oh, how gadty I would die if I could see all the other girls come in with you."

And Helen, like all the rest, touched the old man's hand reverently and went out. A more beloved employer has never existed.

out. A more beloved employer has never existed.

"It cannot believe that any one set fire to the factory and murdered fifty innocent persons," said Mr. Preeman. "I was in my office, and my attention was called to the smoke beneath the stairway. Mr. Lawrence, my bookkeeper, and Mrs. Preeman came over to me and said that the place was on fire. The fire shot out from beneath the stairway. There was nothing beneath the stairway. There was nothing beneath the stairway except two hicycles. Where the fire came from I do not know, but it shot straight up beneath the stairs and licked like a flash across the ceiling. It struck a shelf of plush and a dense black smoke rolled through the lower floor.

"Alfred Decker, foreman of the cutting department, was on the stairs. He ran over to the push button which rings the fire bells and pressed. Sydney Dimmock, who organized the fire drills, and who was in charge of the third floor, came rushing downstairs to see why the bell was being rong.
"It was his work to spring the signals."

"I was his work to spring the signals at drill time, and he was angry, but as a secon as he saw the smoke he rushed back, life ran to the fourth floor and hegan to plead with the girls to hurry. We have not seen Dimmock since. He died shoulder with Neille Connor. Both were willing to die if they could save the girls."

According to all the girls seen today, the floors of the building were well offense and the belt shafts having soaked, the lubricating oil from the machines and the belt shafts having soaked almost the entire floor.

Helen McNuity, the telephone operator, is one of the girls who say that the floors were oil-soaked, and Mr. Freeman does not consider the control goods were strong or woolen and cotton goods were swept up every day and carried out of the strain may be the stail to have a success of the business to which she deven the floors when the strain the floor when the strain the floor when the strain the strain of the strai
